

The Beacon Herald

Girls' babies much less tasty than cupcakes

Bill Harris

April 6

What would you get if you crossed The Cupcake Girls with Kid in a Candy Store?

Sugar coma!

Bet you thought we were going to say "Food fight!"

Both the second-season premiere of The Cupcake Girls on W, and the Canadian debut of Kid in a Candy Store on the Food Network, air Wednesday.

The Cupcake Girls is a Canadian reality series focusing on entrepreneurs Heather White and Lori Joyce as they attempt to balance home life and work life. The back-to-back episodes are more about babies than cupcakes, and while that's decidedly less tasty from our point of view, babies do grow into kids.

Speaking of which, Kid in a Candy Store follows Adam Gertler as he criss-crosses the U.S. in search of the weirdest desserts. That means everything from margarita taffy to what appears to be no-melt ice cream.